

I was appointed as parent governor in December 2020, having been part of the Barrow Hedges community since 2015 when my son joined the nursery. The years are going quickly as my son and daughter move through the school.

After spending a few years working for a medical PR firm, I trained to be a teacher and have now spent 20 years teaching science, predominantly Biology, to local secondary school students. In more recent years, I have taken on the role of Assistant Headteacher with responsibility for teaching and learning. I love the diversity of working in a school, no two days are the same, and working with children and young adults keeps me on my toes and young at heart.

In my spare time I enjoy the great outdoors – running, walking, gardening or exploring new environments with my kids.
